

Furlough Policy

Title: Furlough Policy

Furlough is a temporary but mandatory leave of absence from a client project at client's request.

Furlough is a practice increasingly used by clients where they require contracting staff such as First Derivatives consultants to take forced leave.

Typically, furloughs are imposed during the seasonal periods i.e. Summer and Christmas, however, they can be introduced during any calendar month.

Aim

Set out the process and approach for employees to take furlough leave to ensure compliance with client requirements and effective management of annual leave and/or bench activity.

Scope

This applies globally to all permanent employees working on client sites or working near shore.

Notification

If an employee is notified by the client to take furlough, they are required to raise a JIRA ticket under the 'Furlough' category, inputting all relevant details.

The employee will be contacted by a member of the People Partner team to ensure compliance with client requirements and effective management of annual leave and/or bench activity.

Guidelines

- It is the company's preference that employees use the annual leave to meet the client's requirements and the proposed furlough period.
At a minimum, employees are expected to take 50% of this period as annual leave.
- Where an employee has an excess balance of annual leave, they should take all of the furlough period as annual leave.

Where an employee does not have sufficient annual leave accrued, the options available will be discussed with their People Partner

- Where an employee has an insufficient annual leave balance, they may, be exception, continue to work.

All such requests must be approved by the relevant Business Manager and Head of Practice.

During this period, they will be placed on the bench and will be assigned work to complete.
